SANTA FE, NM —

A Santa Fe tradition for 46 years, the Whitehawk Antique Indian & Ethnographic Art Show returns August 9-12, 2024 bringing together over 120 of the most well-respected exhibitors showcasing handpicked textiles, baskets, paintings, sculpture, jewelry, furniture, fashion, beadwork, pottery, and woodcarving from Native American and world Indigenous cultures, as well as Western artists.

KR Martindale, who also owns and produced the Objects of Art show, has made some major changes this year. After a 14-year run, with an outstanding group of exhibitors, Objects of Art has closed its doors. In its place, however, Martindale has expanded the Whitehawk show to encompass the entirety of the convention center and include many past Objects of Art show participants. This expansion will facilitate the largest gathering of quality exhibitors under one roof in years.

Special Exhibits

Featuring two special exhibitions: Art of Timeless Beauty, the Navajo Child's Blanket, and Miniature Native American Baskets - A Lifetime Collection

Navajo, or Diné, are recognized as great masters of textile weaving. Curated by Robert Parsons, Art of Timeless Beauty, the Navajo Child's Blanket, will showcase some of the finest examples of their 19th-century child's blankets. It will explore the evolution of their blanket designs, from simple bands and stripes to more elaborate and complex patterns, and the historical context for how the Navajo (Diné) adapted their weaving through a changing world and oppressive conditions. The show will include a beautiful catalog.

Miniature Native American Baskets - A Lifetime Collection, curated by Jan Duggan, will...

It will present more than 200 miniature Pima (Akimel O'odham) with over 32 examples by known basketry weavers. This collection signifies the most comprehensive collections of Akimel O'odham baskets ever shown. After this presentation the collection will be donated to a major museum.
